

Falck Safety Services changes its name to RelyOn Nutec

The world's leading safety training partner, RelyOn Nutec (formerly Falck Safety Services), changes name to consolidate global activities around one brand. With 34 locations across 20 countries, the company delivers safety and skills training to more than 250,000 people annually in oil & gas, maritime, renewables and other high-risk potential industries.

The new name, RelyOn Nutec, emphasizes the importance of trust in the customer promise.

Torben Haring, Group CEO of RelyOn Nutec, explains:

"Our customers work in industries with high risk potential, in environments where safety and risk prevention is a critical activity and not a "nice to have" – an activity where there is no compromise. As RelyOn Nutec we help our customers to keep people safe, prepare them for the unexpected and help prepare them how to react in an emergency situation."

The change happens as the company continues to expand its safety service capabilities:

"We have a strong heritage, built by a passionate global organisation of leading safety experts. Trainers, specialists, consultants and leaders who go beyond what is required. These are the people that work together every day to realise our vision: To be the leading global safety partner, providing complete and lasting competences that go beyond compliance", Torben Haring says and continues:

"With Polaris Private Equity as new owners we have the strength to accelerate our transformation and expansion, both in terms of service lines and geography."

The company is renamed RelyOn Nutec and manifests its leading position by introducing a 360 degree approach to safety:

360 means that we in RelyOn Nutec take a 360 degree perspective on safety. This is how we help people and businesses improve safety and how we work ourselves, Torben Haring says.

To us RelyOn means - Rock Solid and Dependable.
